SUSANNAH

SUSANNAH Is a contemporary American musical drama based on the Apocrypha story of Susannah and the Elders. The composer, Carlisle Floyd, has adopted the Biblical story as a libretto, in an attempt to show the alienation and persecution of an innocent girl by her narrow-minded and unsympathetic neighbors. The work is up-to-date in the sense that it Illustrates the hopelessness of an individual faced with the disapproval of society at large, and the tragedy of Susannah is the fact that she is gradually forced to become a hard, lifeless, cynical copy of those who surround her.

The opera begins in a mountain valley, on a sultry evening in mid-summer. A square dance is in progress, and Susannah, a young girl of freshness and charm, is conspicuous by virtue of everyone's interest in her activities. The Elders' wives comment on her, jealously observing that "so pretty a face must hide some evil. They's evil in that one, you'll see." The Evangelist, Olin Blitch, arrives and is greeted with tremendous enthusiasm and a hope that he can save many lost souls.

In the scene which follows, Susannah sings a beautiful aria, "Ain't It a Pretty Night," describing her hopes and dreams for the future. The next morning Susannah is bathing in a stream close to her home. The Elders, in search of a baptism creek, stumble upon her, and driven by guilt at their lustful desire for her, vow to bring her to repentence. That same evening at a community picnic, Susannah is told that she is no longer welcome. In the closing scene of Act I, Little Bat, the retarded son of one of the Elders, comes to tell Susannah why the community has decided to ostracize her. Hurt and uncomprehending, Susannah turns to her brother Sam for consolation as the curtain falls.

Act II begins at the farmhouse with Susannah and Sam trying to understand their situation. Sam has never been able to cope with the problems of life, and all he can do is urge Susannah to go to the Revival Meeting that evening. Scene II is really one of the most exciting pieces of musical theatre composed in the English language since World War II. Floyd's grasp of the primitive tension and impact of a Revival Meeting is masterful. Against her will, Susannah is almost convinced to repent of a crime which she never committed.

Sometime later, back at the farmhouse, she sings a haunting folk song which conveys the emptiness of her present situation. Reverend Blitch, frustrated by his near victory at the Revival Meeting, comes to make one last effort to save Susannah's soul. He is again rejected, but the emotional and physical strain has overcome the young girl, and she submits to a passion which the Evangelist cannot control.

Deeply frightened by his own transgression against "thee and the woman" Blitch pleads with the Lord for forgiveness. He attempts to convince the Elders of Susannah's innocence, but in vain. And, as the gripping work draws to a close, Sam is driven to murder the Evangelist, and Susannah cuts her last tie with the community.
